

ABSTRACT

There is described a back thinned sensor in which a material is added on the front surface to extend the wavelength of the sensor into wavelengths it normally does not reach. In the preferred embodiment, the back-thinned layer comprises silicon and is the 5 base for a CMOS device or a CCD. The photocathode in a night vision device comprises in the preferred unit GaAs.